

Unsure where to start in your upskilling journey?

In the current workforce landscape, mastering green skills is crucial for professionals looking to excel in the sustainable built environment. By adhering to these guidelines, workers can significantly enhance their contributions to eco-friendly projects and secure a valuable position in the evolving green job market.

Boost your network.

Industry events are a great opportunity to learn about exciting roles on offer to you, including the chance to speak with real people who are already working in them.

Great event for young people starting in the industry:

- > Business LDN - Skills London
- > Innovation Zero

Great events for career switchers starting in the industry:

- > Offsite Expo
- > London Build Expo
- > UKreiiF

Upskilling.

Boosting your green skills knowledge is a great way to get to enhance your existing skills and develop new abilities is a great way to grow your career! If you already have qualifications or work experience behind you, a great way to get to enhance your green skills knowledge is through short courses and bootcamps.

Some places to get you started include:

- > City & Guilds
- > Built by Us
- > Government Apprenticeships
- > RICS
- > CITB
- > RIBA
- > Capital City College Group

Industry groups.

There are many industry groups that help those working in and around the built environment find community and network for new career opportunities.

Join one of the many networks and gain the support you need to join the sector:

- > BPIC Network
- > HBF Home Builders Federation
- > Building Equality
- > Women in Property

Earn while you learn with an Apprenticeship.

Apprenticeships are a great route into employment and further training. You can earn a degree-level qualification whilst gaining work experience.

A guide to some of these training courses can found:

- > UCAS Apprenticeships

Confidence.

Put yourself out there and start applying for roles. Everyone has unique experiences which they bring to the workforce, remember to showcase yours.

